Study Regulations Article 118: 118. The progress review of a doctoral student takes place after one studied semester and after two studied semesters from matriculation, and after that, once in an academic year after one standard study year (two studied semesters) from the latest progress review of the doctoral student. The progress review does not take place during academic leave. An external student pursuing a doctoral curriculum is reviewed after two semesters of study from the admission of the external student. [effective as of 3 September 2018]
